cially those of the last four years, are weeded four times in the year. Indeed as soon as the operation is finished at one end, it re-commences at the other; and thinning (on which so much depends, for which every sapling must be individually selected) has to be carried on systematically. Last year 25,000 saplings (some of them being poles of the first quality) were taken from the plantations. I trust that I may be permitted to say that the general condition of the plantations seems to me worthy of the highest praise.

23. It is impossible to go over these immense artificial woods without being struck with the mine of wealth which Government possesses in them, placed as they are, by the side of water communication, by which the timber can be carried at a nominal cost to market,—a point which I do not think is sufficiently thought of in forest management. At the close of the present year there will be about 2,000 acres planted out; and at present the plantations yield a revenue of about double the annual expense of both fresh planting and maintenance. The revenue must materially increase as the trees grow, and it is my belief that fifty years hence after yielding valuable thinnings every year, the area planted up to this date will contain at least 130,000 trees, containing on an average at least 2 tons of solid timber each, worth at £10 per ton, or upwards of two millions and a half sterling for the whole plantations.

24. Some idea may be formed from the above of the actual value of planting operations when properly conducted. No doubt much of the rapid progress of the timber at Nellamboor is due to the quality of the soil, as well as to the peculiarly favourable nature of the climate, to the continued moist heat, which resembles that of a huge conservatory, and to the heavy rain-fall. But without careful supervision, professional skill, and careful practice, climate would not suffice to produce the results which I saw at Nellamboor. The climate we can never hope to equal in the Central Provinces; but I believe that equally good soil may be found, and with two trained European Foresters the power to carry on operations correctly should not be wanting. 324

25. In conclusion, I beg to add how much I am indebted to the kind attention I have received from the Madras Forest Officers. First of all to Dr. Cleghorn, who most kindly came on purpose to meet me personally all the way from Madras to Beypore; also from Captain Beddome, the Officiating Conservator, who conducted me personally to every place of interest in the hills and accompanied me to Nellamboor; also Mr. Batcock at the Cinchona gardens; and especially to Mr. Ferguson at Nellamboor, who took the greatest pains in showing me over all the plantations, and explaining fully all the details of his planting operations, in which personally he is so proficient. I certainly have enjoyed the greatest advantages in acquiring knowledge in forest matters by this tour, which I feel has been of the greatest practical advantage to me, and I feel most grateful to the Chief Commissioner, who sanctioned my taking it.
